When Mr. and Mrs. Green came ( ① ) Matsuyama yesterday, they asked Ken to show them around. The next morning, Ken called their room before he got to the hotel. They agreed to meet him 'at the front' in ten minutes.

Ken waited for half an hour, but they didn't come. So he called their room again, but there was no ( ② ). Just then, an American man angrily came into the hotel from the street. There was a woman with him. (1) Ken thought that the man was Mr. Green and asked him "Excuse me, but are you Mr. Green?" But the man only shouted, "Our guide is late." Ken was surprised and said, "I'm your guide. I was waiting for you 'at the front'." Then Mr. Green said, "We were waiting for you 'at the front' but you didn't come." (2) Mr. Green was so [ that / Ken / know / angry / didn't ] what to say. Ken wanted things to be all right. So he just said, (3) "I'm sorry." Soon Mr. Green stopped shouting.

Then Mr. Green said to Mrs. Green, "The guide admits that he was not at the right place." But Mrs. Green said, "Wait a minute. Ask him what he meant by 'at the front'." Ken was glad to ( ③ ) this and he said, "I meant 'at the front desk of the hotel'." Mr. Green was very surprised and said, "We were waiting for you 'at the front of the building'." Ken said to himself, "I never thought that they would wait there ..." After that they went out.

During lunch, Mr. Green said to Ken, "You weren't wrong about the time and place, so (4) why did you say 'I'm sorry'?" Ken answered, "In Japan, we often apologize first because we don't want to have any trouble". Then Mr. Green said, "In America, 'I'm sorry' often means 'I admit that I've done something wrong'. We don't say 'I'm sorry' if we believe that we're ( ④ )." They talked a lot, and learned a lot about cultural differences.
