(五) 次の英文は、美貴 (Miki) が、世界のエネルギー (energy) について調べたことを、英語の時間に発表したものである。これを読んで、1~7の問いに答えなさい。

These days people in Japan are talking about energy resources. To produce *electricity, what kinds of energy do people use in the world? I did some research and would like to tell you about it.

Our country may have a good balance of coal, oil, natural gas, water, and *nuclear power. Germany looks  to Japan in that way. It also uses coal and nuclear. However, Germany has decided to stop using nuclear *completely by 2022. *On the other hand, the U.S. and France use a lot of nuclear power and will continue to (B) do so.

The Philippines uses lots of *geothermal power. Because geothermal *power plants use *heat from inside the earth, they are better for areas that have *volcanoes. [ ア ] In *Norway, most of their energy comes from water power.  So they have many small *dams to make electricity.

While I was researching and thinking about the future of energy, I was the most interested in one country. [ イ ] This country is one of the world's most *advanced energy *nations. In the 1980s, it began its change to *renewable energy. Today, almost 100% of its electricity comes from *renewables.

About 80% of *Iceland's power comes from *hydroelectric power. [ ウ ] The country has many *glaciers, and a lot of water *melts from them. Hydroelectric power plants make electricity from this water. The other 20% comes from geothermal power. This is made from the energy  for not only electricity but also for heating.

There are no *thermal or nuclear power plants in Iceland. Today its fossil fuel use is *mostly for transportation. [ エ ] But it is also making cars that run on renewable energy. Iceland plans to use no fossil fuels at all by 2030.

Iceland has a *population of 30 *million people. Its area is about the size of Hokkaido and Shikoku together. Japan has a larger population and area, so it is  to *compare the two countries. However, Japan also has many volcanoes and a lot of water. Maybe Japan can learn some things about energy from Iceland. Thank you for  to my *presentation.
